OPINION

PER CURIAM

Charles Iseley, Sr., an inmate, appeals from the District Court's order dismissing his complaint. For the following reasons, we will dismiss Iseley's appeal.¹

On December 11, 2002, Iseley initiated this action by filing a complaint, in forma pauperis, alleging various instances of constitutional rights violations by numerous prison officials.² See 42 U.S.C. § 1983. On February 23, 2004, Iseley filed an amended complaint, similar in most respects to his initial complaint, again alleging a myriad of constitutional violations occurring over a two-year span and involving 55 defendants at five prisons across Pennsylvania. In doing so, the Magistrate Judge noted, in a report entered on April 7, 2005, that Iseley was "attempting to combine a minimum of four, and possibly five, different complaints and causes of action into one." Given the numerous difficulties inherent in seeking to remedy such a bevy of allegations, the District Court, on April 18, 2005, ordered Iseley to file separate complaints alleging only the facts which occurred at each facility and naming as defendants only those persons at those respective facilities.³ On August 9, 2005, the District Court reiterated its previous order compelling Iseley to file separate complaints and set a deadline of September 6, 2005. The court also noted that failure to comply with its deadline would “result in entry of an order dismissing this action.”

¹ We have jurisdiction over this appeal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291. Because Iseley has been granted in forma pauperis status on appeal, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915, we first review this appeal for possible dismissal pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B).

On the following dates the court granted Iseley motions to extend the time in which to comply with the court’s order: September 12, October 13, and January 9. In its final extension grant, the court noted that Iseley would be permitted until April 13 to comply with the court’s order and that no further extensions would be granted. On March 17, Iseley filed a document entitled “Court-Ordered Complaint.” On March 31, the District Court addressed this complaint noting that although it appeared to partially comply with the court’s order, it remained faulty because it incorporated Iseley’s previous complaint by reference, thus “negati[ing] the very purpose for which the Court initially ordered [Iseley] to file separate complaints.” The Magistrate Judge dismissed Iseley’s “Court-Ordered Complaint” without prejudice to file, within 30 days, one or more complaints that complied with the District Court’s original order. After receiving nothing from Iseley, the District Court ordered, on May 8, that Iseley’s matter be dismissed. Iseley then filed yet another motion for extension of time which was denied by the District Court on May 11. On May 22, Iseley filed a motion for reconsideration which the District Court denied two days later. Iseley subsequently filed a timely appeal.⁴

The District Court's dismissal of Iseley's suit was equivalent to a dismissal for failure to prosecute and was entirely appropriate. A District Court has the authority to dismiss a suit sua sponte for failure to prosecute by virtue of its inherent powers and pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 41(b). See Link v. Wabash R.R. Co., 370 U.S. 626, 630-31 (1962). Such a dismissal is deemed to be an adjudication on the merits, barring any further action between the parties. See Landon v. Hunt, 977 F.2d 829, 833 (3d Cir. 1992). Ordinarily a District Court is required to consider and balance six factors enumerated in Poulis v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co., 747 F.2d 863 (3d Cir. 1984), when deciding, sua sponte, to use dismissal as a sanction. When a litigant's conduct makes adjudication of the case impossible, however, such balancing under Poulis is unnecessary. See Guyer v. Beard, 907 F.2d 1424, 1429-30 (3d Cir. 1990); see also Spain v. Gallegos, 26 F.3d 439, 454-55 (3d Cir. 1994). We find that this is such a case.

Iseley not only utterly failed to comply with court orders, but, as is obvious from our recitation, was afforded a plethora of chances to remedy the situation and never chose to properly do so. Further, this case has meandered for many years with no perceptible progress due to Iseley's repeated obstructions and contumacious conduct. Thus, it is plain from our review of the record that such facts warranted the District Court's dismissal.

For the foregoing reasons, this appeal will be dismissed under 28 U.S.C. § 1915(e)(2)(B).
